HEIGHT LIMIT OF SKYSCRAPER NEAR

Elevator Demands Make Lofty Towers Unprofitable.

New York.—Where 100,000 men once spent 20 years building a pyramid for the Pharaohs, a thousand men now rear a modern skyscraper 50 stories into the air in a single year. But while the Pharaohs raised their monument to stand for all time, the life of the modern monument to commerce is fixed at 25 years. Children who watch these lofty towers rescind toward the sky today in New York, Chicago and a score of other cities will, as middle-aged adults, see them leveled again.

The explanation is that the average skyscraper is being built comparatively as cheaply as a subdivision bungalow because the builder cannot afford to take chances on the course of rapidly changing land values as the American city changes its course of growth, points out Silas Bent in World's Work. They cannot risk sinking a fortune in a giant office structure only to find that within 10 or 15 years the district has changed from a commercial one to a manufacturing center. They also cannot risk encumbering land that may rise many times in value with a building that may be antiquated within a decade.

"The taller the building, the greater must be the number of elevators to accommodate the tenants," he points out in the World's Work article. "Now where ground rentals are enormous the space given over to elevators becomes an item of moment. In cities of a million population it is calculated that the 20 story building is about as lofty as is consistent with economic construction. Only where land values are abnormal, or where there is exceptional advertising value in mere height, are more stories justified."

A building so high that it must give a third or half of its ground space over to elevator shafts would necessarily be far more costly than one only two-thirds as high, and not as profitable, he shows. So that un less engineers devise some apparent ly impossible means of indoor transportation for the tens of thousands of inhabitants, the skyscraper soon will have reached its positive limit.

Former Ghost Town Citizens Hold Reunion

Traver, Calif.—One of California's best known "ghost" towns returned to life here with a population of approximately 500 citizens for one day, when visitors came from as far north as Sacramento and as far south as Los Angeles.

"Visitanza" is the proper word to describe the returning population, for all of the 500 persons were former residents, gathered in reunion. It was the 45th anniversary of the founding of Traver, once a 2,000 population center of a great grain and horticultural area.

Every building in the town has disappeared. The last to go was the Del Zante hotel, burned to the ground last year, together with a little store.

All all was responsible for Traver's demise as a municipality. The chemical came to the surface with irrigation, killing grain, orchards and vine yards.

Cattle now roam over sparse "salt grass" where once a prosperous community existed. The 500 reunionists picknicked beneath the great evergreen trees that border what once was the Traver school yard.

The field of grain is under one fence and comprises 6,000 acres. Production is expected to total about 200,000 bushels of wheat valued at approximately $250,000.

400 AGENCIES BACK MOVE TO SAVE EYES

Progress Made in Prevention of Blindness.

New York City.—The last year has seen the most widespread campaign for the prevention of blindness in the history of America, it is announced by Lewis H. Carris, managing director of the National Society for the Prevention of Blindness, in making public the society's fourteenth annual report.

The movement for the prevention of blindness now has behind it not only the organizations built up for this particular purpose, but also, the report shows, the medical profession, the field of education, organized labor, the safety movement, the profession of social work, federal, state and local governmental officers, and many groups of public-spirited private citizens.

Four hundred agencies are co-operating with the Society for the Prevention of Blindness.

"Men and women in every walk of life are now participating in the campaign to save the eyes of the nation," Mr. Carris said.

Two New Projects.

"During 1928 the National society undertook two new projects involving joint efforts. With the League of Red Cross societies, the National society undertook a study of international aspects of prevention of blindness, the report of which will be published in 1929 in English and in French by the League of Red Cross societies. The second project is an extensive co-operative educational campaign with the American Federation of Labor to reach 5,000,000 families of working men and women. In addition, it has continued its past co-operative relationships with scores of local and national agencies, realizing that the gospel of prevention of blindness must actually permeate the atmosphere in order that the responsibility of the citizen, the parent, the teacher, the doctor, the nurse, the illuminating engineer, the safety engineer, the worker, and the employer, all take their responsibility to prevent blindness and save sight."

Steady progress continues toward the society's goal of complete elimination of ophthalmia neonatorum, usually called "babies' sore eyes," as a cause of blindness, the report points out. The use of prophylactic drops in the eyes of babies at birth is now required in most states, and free supplies of the solution are furnished to midwives, nurses and doctors in 36 states. Entire eradication of this source of blindness—once the most prolific of all causes—is said to be scientifically possible.

Use "Game" for Kids.

By means of a special "game" for preschool age children, the society is able to test, with some accuracy, the vision of children too young to read the letters on the charts used for adults, the report mentions.

Two classes for school children with seriously defective vision, started 15 years ago, have grown into 318 "sight-saving" classes throughout the country in a specialized field of education today, the report says. Through the use of large type books, movable desks, ideal lighting, and special teaching methods, children with little vision are not only given the same sort of education that children with full vision receive, but they are taught how to conserve their remaining sight. The society estimates that approximately 5,000 such classes are needed in the United States.

"Through a questionnaire addressed to industrial plants, the National society together with the National Safety council endeavored to ascertain for the first time the instances in which eyes have been saved in industry through the use of mechanical safety devices," the report says. "The experience of 583 industrial plants employing more than 578,000 men and women during the years 1926 and 1927 indicates that in the two-year period 2,757 men and women were saved from serious injury or total blindness in both eyes, and 4,654 were saved from serious injury or total blindness in one eye. Detailed information regarding this study will be available later. During the year 1928 almost 500,000 pieces of literature were circulated by the society."

TO HONOR WRITER OF FAIRY TALES

World to Observe Andersen's 125th Birthday.

New York.—Plans now under way for the observance next year of the one hundred and twenty-fifth anniversary of the birth of Hans Christian Andersen by literary bodies and even governments all over the world are announced in the Golden Book Magazine.

This tribute to the eccentric Dane, whose fairy tales have probably been translated into more languages than the writings of any other one man, will be in a sense an apology for an all too frequent human error—that of mistaking genius for stupidity. Andersen, it is recalled, was regarded in his youth not only as a dolt but often as a lunatic.

Julius Mortzen, the Danish-American writer, relates how Andersen, in his early teens and beset with desire to shine on the stage, threw Mme. Schall, the noted dancer, into a fit of consternation when he arrived in Copenhagen, attired in his father's made-over greatcoat and a hat which fell over his eyes, and presented himself at her house.

He expected the star to sponsor his career, and opened the audience with the announcement that he could play the part of Cinderella! Moreover he removed his boots—to aid his dance—took his hat in hand for handsome line, and began to trip fantastically over the floor singing: "Here below nor rank nor riches are exempt from pain and woe."

"My strange gestures and my great activity caused the lady to think me out of my mind, and she lost no time in getting rid of me," Andersen wrote in adult years.

The extreme poverty of Andersen's childhood—his father was a cobbler, his mother a washerwoman—made him the butt of children's jokes and accentuated his sensitivity into characteristics of eccentricities which he carried through his life, points out the Golden Book writer. Even when he was successful and acclaimed, he never forgot the slights or painful episodes of his youth, and took pains to repay them in strange ways.

For instance, the minister who was to confirm him as a boy thought him too poor and stupid to bother with, and sent him to the vicar for the sacrament. In later years Andersen, visiting the king of Denmark on the island of Fyoder, learned that the minister lived near by. He borrowed the king's carriage with its footmen and luxurious trappings and called on the clergyman while the carriage waited in all its ostentation at the door. "That," he related, "was my revenge."

Before his death in 1875, this odd weaver of fairy tales, despite his eccentricities and grotesque appearance, was probably the best beloved of European literary men, even among literary people themselves.

Armor Still Made by London Man

London.—The last of a fading profession, there is still one man in London who makes his living hammering out shing armor.

But sometimes queer things are done with the steel dresses he turns out. He has just delivered a fine suit of armor to a large London house where it will be used for a wireless receiving set.

A plain suit of armor costs about $150 and takes three weeks to make. More elaborate ones take six weeks and cost several hundred dollars. His entire shop, which is hung with old and new armor, is in medieval taste. All the armor is hammered out by the owner and his aged sister, both of whom learned the trade from their father.

Congress has adjourned for two months and the President and Mrs. Hoover may devote more time to social functions—we hope without negro attendants.

Campbell County School Board has awarded school routes to lowest responsible bidders— Appomattox board awards to favorites without bids and pays for same out of people's tax money.

Hon. A. J. Terrell wins the Democratic nomination for the House of Delegates from Appomattox and Buckingham district without opposition.

At last the Farm Relief bill has become a law and so has the Federal Appropriation bill giving the board $151,000,000 to start operation—will some friend of the farmers tell us Appomattox rubes how we are to share in this relief measure. I am not more credit we need, but rather a profit on what we produce. Now, don't everybody speak at once.

For a Fighting Organization

That Democratic National headquarters in Washington will be a business-like, going concern, functioning every day in the year and not merely during a few weeks preceeding election campaigns, and that party organizations will be formed to include every one of the 150,00 election districts in the various state, was disclosed by party leaders during the dinner given given in Washington this week in honor of Honorable Jouett Shouse, of Kansas, recently made Chairman of the Executive Committee of the National Committee. At the head of the organization directing the work will be Mr. Shouse, a former member of Congress from Kansas and former Assistant Secretary of the Treasury under President Wilson, who has virtually abandoned his private interests to give his time during the next three years, without pay, to organization work for the Democratic party.

Delivering the principal address at the dinner given by the Jeffersonian Association of the District of Columbia as a mark of appreciation to him Mr. Shouse emphasised the fact that the organization which he will direct will have absolutely nothing to do with candidacies Ahree major activities will be undertaken by the Washington national headquarters, he said, to include organization, publicity and research. The purpose will be to keep the people informed about what is taking place in the conduct of their government and to endeavor to win them to the support of the Democratic party and its principles, first in the Congressional election next year and then in 1932 in the election of a President. Pointing out that no political organization can carry on successfully merely from the top, Mr. Shouse asked for the co-operation of the State organizations, they in turn to enlist the active cooperation of the county organizations, and so on down to the precinct organizations on which, in the final analysis, success must depend.

He emphasized the point that the party organization must have and will have nothing to do with candidacies or individual ambitions, that being for the party individuals themselves to do when the proper time arrives.

Antis Nominate Dr. Brown

The Anti-Smith Democrats in convention at Roanoke Tuesday nominated by acclamation Dr. William Mosely Brown for Governor and Captain C. C. Berkley for Attorney General to be voted for at the general election in November.

Speakers denounced in vigorous terms the machine headed by Rascob, Smith and Tammany Hall and Virginia leaders who belong to that regime.

Dr. Brown in accepting the nomination for Governor said in part:

"I have never been one of those who feared to champion a righteous cause, whatever the consequences to my personal fortunes or future career", Dr. Brown said. For the right is bound to triumph and those who are condemned as ignominious and fanatical disturbers of the established order of things will tomorrow, I believe, be hailed as the pioneers of a new era in the history of humanity."

Bishop James Cannon, Jr., of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, organizer of the anti-Smith Democrats, sent a message to the convention in which he declared "Rascobism versus Southern Democracy" the outstanding issue in the Democratic party and called upon anti-Smith Democrats to serve notice on the Democratic leadership, state and national, that Virginia would never again be in the Democratic column until the party was purged of "Rascobism".

The nominee of the convention, Dr. Brown, is professor of psychology and sociology at Washington and Lee. He holds an A. B. and an M. A. degree from Washington and Lee and a Ph. D. from Columbia. He was born in Lynchburg but was educated in the public schools of Danville. For a time he was instructor in German at Washington and Lee but subsequently devoted his time to psychology and the social sciences.

Dr. Brown is of medium height, rather heavy set, and is clean shaven. He is married and has two small children. He is a member of the Authors Club of London and is author of several books and pamphlets. He is president of the Virginia Academy of Science, is a Mason, a Shriner, a renowned golf of Delta Kappa Epsilonfraternity, Phi Beta Kappa honorary scholastic fraternity and for some time has been examiner in psychology for the state board of public welfare.

When he was conducted to the platform, Dr. Brown said: "I feel very humble in the face of this opportunity. I may read a few remarks to you today but when I start stumping this state you won't find me reading from any paper. Nobody wrote this speech for me. I don't employ anybody to write my speeches and I speak from the heart".

It kinder looks to us that the organization is in for a real fight to hold the grasp on state affairs it has enjoyed for so long a time. Since the days of Gen. Mahone.

The policy will be to get as many qualified voters to vote in the primary and in this way bind the voters to support the primary nominee. So if there be a large vote in the primary Dr. Brown may know that he is defeated long before the November election.

Tobacco Co-Ops

Approximately 30,000 farmers in Virginia are interested in the monthly report of Federal receivers for the Tri-State Tobacco Growers' Co-Operative Association, filed in Raleigh, N. C., Saturday, to the effect that assets now in hand will wipe out the indebtedness of $420,818.01, representing secure notes held by banks and that after all debts a million dollars may remain for distribution to members.

General creditors will be paid after the banks are paid, and then the surplus is to be divided among the 90,000 members of the association in Virginia, North and South Carolina.

The report filed Saturday showed there was a recognized indebtedness of only $420,818.01 to the Federal Intermediate Credit Bank of Baltimore, which financed the association. Accounts receivable amount to $415,044.16. This fund, together with other assets made but not yet billed, extinguish the bank debts.

In addition to accounts receivable, the three receivers report that on June 1, last, they had 10,577,222 pounds of tobacco in warehouse with an inventory value of $2,330,338.68. Ahe sum to be derived from sale of this tobacco will be smaller than the Inventory sum, it is said, inasmuch as the inventory value represents the appraisal value at the time the tobacco was received from members from the 1922-23-24-25 crops

Indebtedness to general creditors is estimated around $100,000.

The three receivers are M. L. Coery, of Richmond; James H. Pou, of Raleigh, and H. S. Ward, of Washington, N. C. It was stated at Mr. Corey's office here yesterday that Mr. Corey will be out of the city all this week. In his absence, attaches would not comment on the statement attributed to Federal Judge Isaac M. Meekins, who several months ago said he believed after all debts had been paid, a million dollars would be left for distribution to members.

It was stated at Mr. Corey's office that until all the association's tobacco has been sold, debts paid and the costs of the receivership and distribution of the suuplus deducted, any effort to lead members to feel they would share in a large surplus should be dicouraged.
